On a lighter note

What's a potatoes least favourite day of the week?

Fry-day!

The month of June has been a cold month and we are happy that it's past us now and July has welcomed us with some long-awaited sunshine. Let's hope it lasts...

Farmer of the month

Our farmer of the month is Mr Macquire.

We installed a tunnel for him and it has been put to good use & he's farming a range of crops. The produce looks really healthy and we are looking forward to seeing more of this in the near future.

Organic food is the healthier option because of what it doesn't have: pesticides and preservatives.

Frost Protection

Winter is generally a difficult month to farm due to the harsh weather crops are exposed to. They are vulnerable to frost which destroys & hampers growth thus affecting your expected yield. Fortunately for you, if you happen to find yourself in this situation there is a solution to salvage your hard work.

Nappy liners

Liner being layed down

It acts like a blanket, that you spread along your beds which covers the crop and protects it against those unforgiving winter days. Hoops can be used to create a tunnel-like structure which is useful for crops that grow vertically like tomatoes and peppers. You can also cover the row by laying it directly on the crop with no damage to the produce. If you're laying the cover directly on the ground, make sure you leave enough space for crop growth.

You can seal the edges of the row cover with sandbags or soil. Greencon stocks nappy liners so contact us to place your order.

Pro tip

You can use wire/pvc pipes to make the hoops yourself.

What to look forward to

In the month of July we will be launching our blog, which will have some fresh farming content, tips & techniques for both seasoned and new farmers. So be sure to visit our website and stay up to date.

Thank you to all our valued customers for your continued support and hoping for a fruitful 2nd half of 2020.

End.
