LOCAL BARS LOWER ACCEPTANCE RATE FOR YEAR-ROUND DRINKING

The Designated Outdoor Refreshment Area (DORA) is a demilitarized zone wherein patrons of local watering holes can exercise the freedom to open carry open containers in the summer and winter, but that may soon change as city officials vote to extend the privilege to college students.

City Council hosted a symposium to discuss the pilot program while drunk; officials rallied the next morning to reconsider the proposal while sober.

"We want residents, students, and visitors to enjoy our town," city officials explained. "No one can do that sober."

The Public Ivy is no stranger to public intoxication, let alone day drinking outdoors, but some students are concerned about a "devolution of drinking culture."

"Our bouncers are measuring skulls as a form of identification now," an anonymous bar manager stated. "Since drunk driving is illegal, most [students] don't bring a driver's license with them to the bars."

In an effort to secure more arbitrary votes, some bars have desperately raised their acceptance rate to let in more patrons — 92% of the line, in fact.

Critics of the plan were quick to address the secret elephant in the room: designated disposable cups are not required to be disposed of, meaning the prohibition on drinking outside alcohol outside is really more of a suggestion.

ARMED SUSPECT ROBS OXFORD OF CONFIDENCE IN LAW ENFORCEMENT

On April 10 at 12:35 p.m., police reported that an armed robber had fled on foot with a fistful of dollars and a fistful of booze.

Police soon suspended the search to take a lunch break near the scene of the crime; concerned citizens stooped to fat-shaming the pigs in protest against police futility.

The suspect has yet to be identified because they were wearing a mask, which most law-abiding citizens have given up on.

BETTER TOGETHER WEEK EXCLUDES ATHEISTS FROM BEING CORRECT

Better Together Week (April 10–16) is an annual ritual that "promotes religious inclusivism, fosters interfaith dialogue, and re-eduates [your children] through labor."

Students come together to learn about meaning-making traditions, also known as indoctrinated coping mechanisms, other than their own.

But this year, non-believers are prohibited from participating in organized practices on the sacred grounds that atheists* perpetuate religious intolerance.

"I don't know," an agnostic student responded to the accusations. "I guess it could be possible."

*Holier-than-thou students who identify as atheists are often incredulously celibate.

You better read your satire; there are starving illiterates in Athens.

A DEATH THREAT FROM OUR EDITOR

Dear Miami,

(No, not that Dear Miami.)

Last issue, we published a column that joked about suicide, and because we didn't want to commit career suicide, we included a content warning.

Now that nobody wants to kill themselves, things are going to change around here.

From here on, we'll be pulling trigger warnings in hopes that you'll do the same without any warning.

That's a joke, sort of like our mental health facilities on campus.

Unlike suicide jumpers, not every joke lands, and that's okay.

That doesn't mean we should get hung up about it, but we do love it when you hang on our every word.

Comedy writing isn't easy — just look at The Miami Student.

Black comedy on a college campus requires knowing how to walk a fine line; most of you couldn't straightly walk a line even if you studied for your sobriety test.

For future issues, we'll be more inclusive of offensive jokes.

The reason why we never employed any black comedy in our past issues is two-fold:

1. Miami University will photograph it.
2. Oxford residents might try to lynch it.

In spite of that, such audacious endeavors to do our best have made us lose sight of our mission: to do our worst.

& Dishonor

WARNING

Locals reported cougar sightings at the bars this past weekend. If you encounter a wild MILF in your area, do not approach or run. Be on the lookout for parents on the road who drive about as well as their daughters.

POLL: DRIVERS SAY JAYWALKERS DESERVE THE DEATH PENALTY

According to a new survey some bored nerds actually took the time to fill out, 99%* of respondents said that pedestrians should shuffle off this mortal crosswalk.

Jaywalkers of all walks of life are often profiled as risk-takers who confidently put themselves out there, but drivers say that they still "deserve what's coming to them" at high speeds.

(Bus drivers in particular cannot brake fast as part of their religious observation.)

Cyclists, skateboarders, and friend groups were also listed as potential targets of hit-and-put-it-in-reverse-and-hit-them-again's.

Others try to look both ways on the issue, claiming that drivers are to blame.

"This is what I want," a student we found laying in the street told our journalists. "I'd rather die than fill out one of those [surveys]."

*1% of respondents said that death is too good for jaywalkers and that "there has to be some slower method of punishment for people who slow down traffic."

YOU'RE STILL HERE?

Hate & Dishonor died in that car accident. We're just a figment of your imagination. You have to let us go. Please, let us go.
