I am a NCTJ-qualified digital and print journalist and have worked for the Daily Colchester Gazette and the Clacton Gazette since March 2019.

On a daily basis I source and produce an eclectic range of stories before determining how best to present them across multi-media platforms.

I also regularly attend and cover breaking news incidents and press conferences at which I photograph and film content, interview eyewitnesses, and present Facebook Live videos.

One livestream I captured, which showed police shredding cannabis plants in Colchester High Street, garnered more than 250,000 views.

I have also recently created and launched The Gazette Talks - a video interview series in which I speak with everyone from business owners and community figures.

Prior to securing my first full-time job in journalism I was a freelance writer for Acoustic Magazine and carried out work experience placements at The Independent, NME, MTV News and Channel 4.
