I am a NCTJ-qualified digital and print journalist.

I am currently the Digital Audience and Content Editor of several north Essex Newsquest titles, including the Colchester Gazette - a news brand I have worked for since 2019.

On a daily basis I am responsible for driving the news agenda both in print and on our websites, editing copy, writing headlines, and deciding how best to present articles online and across multi-media platforms.

I also source and produce an eclectic range of stories and regularly attend and cover breaking news incidents and press conferences at which I photograph and film content, interview eyewitnesses, and present Facebook Live videos.

One livestream I captured, which showed police shredding cannabis plants in Colchester High Street, garnered more than 250,000 views.

I have also launched The Gazette Talks - a video interview series in which I speak to everyone from business owners and community figures.

Prior to securing my first full-time job in journalism I was a freelance writer for Acoustic Magazine and carried out work experience placements at The Independent, NME, MTV News and Channel 4.
