

Birthday Parties Are A Wonderful Highlight Of Childhood Memories

Pink frosted cupcakes, unicorn cups, glitter-filled balloons, gifts wrapped in fancy paper and of course the glorious chocolate birthday cake. For a child there is no higher excitement level than what is reached during a birthday party. Even the anticipation of the party is almost as much fun as the party itself.

For children themed birthday parties are a highlight of their childhood memories. When adults look back on their childhood years they are sure to recall the blissful times of being the center of attention at their amazing birthday party.

That is probably one of the many reasons parents get such a kick out of arranging birthday parties for their kids. While it's beautiful to see your child get hyped about the yummy food, fun games and glorious decorations, there perhaps is another reason you get so much joy from birthday party planning. You are remembering the fond memories of parties when you were a kid. Of course you want your child to also have this joyful feeling.

We asked some 5-year-olds what the best part of their last birthday party was. Here are some cute replies.

Sarah: Opening my presents from my friends. I got a mermaid puzzle and a princess coloring book.

Joe: I had a Team Umizoomi cake. It was awesome!

Lisa: All the food was pink. It's my favorite color. And it tasted good.

Birthday parties are a chance to be creative with complete freedom to go as experimental or as over the top as you can. You don't get many opportunities to decorate a My Little Pony-themed table with pink chiffon, sweet handmade framed signs, miniature horses and a little pink candy bag with each guest's name on the plate. All against a backdrop of soft pink and white balloons. How could you little girl not remember such an elaborate, gorgeous, dreamy birthday table? Add friends, food and cake - her birthday will be a favorite childhood memory for sure.
